A Turk's Revenge.

A certain Pasha in high position, writes a Constantinople correspondent, had a wife—only one—to whom he had always been an indulgent and loving husband. They had no child, but still he kept faithful to his promises never to take another wife. One day while he was out one of the servants came and told him to go home and enter the house by a private way open only to the servants. He did so, and went to his chamber to find it locked. With one blow it was open, and his dishonor was only too apparent. He was armed, but he made no use of his pistols or saber. He simply addressed the man, who was one of his intimate friends, and told him he could not leave the room until he was paid. This man stared in hopeless astonishment and fear, when the Pasha demanded five francs. The man paid it and gladly left. The Pasha addressed no word of reproach to his wife, but left the room, and commanded a banquet to be served that night, but only for himself and wife. He remained alone till then. His wife had always eaten with him, and been his companion instead of playing.

He had always honored her above all the women in the world, and she was treated by him in every respect not only as an equal, but as a superior being. The banquet was spread. He went and gave his arm to his wife and conducted her to the table, placed her as usual, but before he had eaten anything he had taken the five franc piece and laid it on the table before her and between them. For six months he ate every meal with her and slept by her side, but always with that five-franc piece between them. Where he had bought her one elegant dress before he now gave her three. Where he had been kind before he was ten-fold kinder in manner, and he allowed her perfect liberty of action. Yet every day and every night, like an accusing angel, was that piece of money laid between them. She could not eat, though pressed most affectionately, with that silent accuser there; she could not sleep, though the best physicians tried their skill, with that specter beside her; and so, when six months were passed, one day the wasted skeleton body of the woman was found dead on the divan.

THE STRIKE—THE COAL TRADE.—The continuance of the strike of the Pennsylvania coal miners is very seriously affecting the coal trade of Philadelphia. The Ledger says that were the coal trade of that city at its usual vigor at the present time, there would be 100,000 to 150,000 tons of coal sent by water weekly, either by sea or through the various canals, whilst now the shipment will probably not exceed 5,000 to 10,000 tons weekly, and that considerable amount of work is being lost. The decrease of export does not represent a decrease to that extent of the coal supply, but rather a falling off in Philadelphia commerce which is lost through the coal strike for the benefit of other cities. There is no strike in the regions which supply coal to Baltimore, Georgetown, Alexandria, and but a partial one in the coal fields supplying New York. Hence the coal export of those ports is greatly stimulated. Baltimore, Georgetown and Alexandria never knew such prosperous times as now, and their export trade in coal is pushed to the utmost, whilst the same is true of Weehawken, Elizabethport, Perth Amboy, Port Johnson and the other coal shipping ports around New York harbor. The fleets of vessels that ordinarily make Philadelphia harbor busy are now trading elsewhere, and these towns mentioned will not be distressed if this state of affairs should continue indefinitely. If the people interested in the commerce of our port do not wish their advantages to slip away, they ought to do something to prevent it. Our harbor never was so lifeless as now in coal trade, and the enforced idleness will continue until the coal trade is again put in motion in this direction.

ORIGIN OF THE WORD "PROTESTANT."—With the month of April is associated the derivation and dissemination of a formal and official manner of the designation of Protestant. The Emperor Charles the Fifth called a Diet at Spire in 1529 to request aid from the German princes against the Turks, and to devise means for allaying the disputes growing out of Luther's rebellion against Catholicism. The Diet condemned the reformers and issued a decree in support of the doctrines of the ancient church. Against this decree six Lutheran princes and the deputies of thirteen towns of the Empire formally protested on April 17, 1530. From this act the designation of Protestant, which was given to the followers of Luther, is derived. The Calvinists were subsequently included, and the title became general for all the sects outside the original Christian Church. The six protesting princes were John and George, the electors of Saxony and Brandenburg; Ernest and Francis, the two Dukes of Lüneburg; the Landgrave of Hesse, and the Prince of Anhalt.

THE VIBRATORY NOTE.—In order that processions may safely cross large suspension bridges, it is necessary that they should break step in order to insure safety; and it is told, in illustration, that when the first suspension bridge was building in England a bolder officer ordered to demolish it with his fiddle. Striking one note after another he eventually hit the vibrating note or fundamental vibrations. Only recently a bridge went down in France under the tread of a regiment of infantry who neglected to break step on entering it. Three hundred persons were drowned. The experiment of breaking a tumbler or other glass vessel by frequent repetitions of some particular note of the human voice belongs to the same class of phenomena.

POTTED SHAD.—Take four good sized fresh shad; cut each into six pieces; lay these in salt water for a few hours; after taking these out of the salt water drain them well. Then take eight teaspoonfuls of salt, one of red pepper, one of black pepper, one of cloves, half teaspoonful of mace and mix them thoroughly. Sprinkle the fish well with these condiments; lay the fish in a stone jar, and cover it with good strong vinegar. Place a cloth cover over the jar, tie it down, and bake contents over a slow fire from six to eight hours. When done set away in a cool place for a few days; and when the jar is opened you will find all bones have disappeared and a nice relish is before you.
